The seminar deals with the recent European Commission's proposal about a Digital Services Act Package. More specifically it deepens the non-economic and the economic part of the Package. Accordingly, on the one hand, it focuses on platform liability and online content moderation; on the other hand, it deals with the regulation of the market power of the large digital gatekeepers. Lastly, the seminar takes stock of the whole scope of the Package for an insight overview of the underlying fundamental rights and values (i.e. freedom of speech and expression, freedom to conduct a business, right to privacy and data protection, right to an effective remedy, right to the protection of intellectual property as well as the implied fundamental value of human dignity and the fundamental principle of equality).
